In this classically structured action/adventure story involving a Native American and his vision quest, novelist Jonathan Womack has crafted a deeply moving and life-affirming novel. Set in the stark beauty of Glacier National Park, Montana, Park-Ranger Jared Neeling is despondent and depressed when he escapes certain death. Jared is then called upon by his Cheyenne ancestors to confront a brutal serial killer who is searching for an amulet that will endow him with the power to destroy the Cheyenne race. Blinded in an unfortunate accident, Jared is forced to call upon inner strength and supernatural development of his remaining four senses to aid him in his journey. Along the way, Jared meets noted anthropologist Jessica Corbett, the leader of a team of nine diggers murdered by the supernaturally strong and evil Zach Arsonault. Jessica is the keeper of one half of the magical amulet and soon becomes a pawn of desire for both men. Set on the night of a lunar eclipse, this tale of action and suspense twists and turns like the mountain passes traversed by Jared and his beloved horse, Stonewalker. Each character is fully realized, told in a knowing and wise narration,

"The Dogman Cometh" is seeped in ancient lore and flowing with blood and violence. The gory climax features the best fight to the death in many moons, as Jared and Zach square off, calling on otherworldly powers to settle their conflict. Open your mind to influences from paranormal energies, auras, ghosts, zombies and spontaneous healing, and "The Dogman Cometh" is a hopeful tome of our connection to the universe.
